Philip Delisle : Strange Connections and Framing Conventions before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Strange Connections and Framing Conventions:

It is entirely possible that a book exists outside this one-that this is a book within a book. I sometimes imagine the world outside of the text. Its inhabitants, machines of logic, are receivers of endless data. Their task is to give the information shape and order. These creatures do not know what is real because they have no means of evaluating truth. Fiction, nonsense, random noise: there is no differentiation. Many of these individuals are confused, living out fantasies or delusions. No illusion is more valid than any other though, so everyone interacts as if all fantasies were real and compatible. Perhaps they are.
